Author of two books on ending war, his groundbreaking work offers clear and compelling insights based on military experience, and extensive research into human nature and the myths that perpetuate war. His persuasive dialogue offers deeper solutions to our national and global problems. His third book (and title of his presentation) will be published in February.

His presentation will be followed by a dialogue with a panel of respondents who are men and women veterans of current US wars. Those attending will also be invited to participate in the conversation.
